Digital Empowerment for Students: Avoiding Risks and Embracing Opportunities

Children, immersed in a digital world with potential access to 4 billion online consumers, face real risks with real consequences. They often navigate the digital world with little to no parental guidance. As trusted adults, we must learn to engage our students and empower them to avoid risks and embrace opportunities. Learn how to INVEST your time, to INSPIRE your students, and empower them to IMPACT their future.

ABOUT THE SPEAKER

Scott Frank, a father of six children and a retired "Internet Crimes Against Children Investigator" founded the Digital Empowerment Project in 2017. Scott currently travels the country speaking to parents, students and educators. Scott brings a unique perspective to his presentations having posed online as a teen for several thousand hours.

Empowering our children to make safe and healthy choices online, as Scott firmly believes, is our responsibility as trusted adults. Digitally connected children desperately need our help as statistics reveal that nearly one-half of children are navigating the digital world with little to no guidance.
